Editor, Publisher and Business Woman Disappointed Parents by Marriage, But So Aided Husband He Is Now Presiden tial Possibility.

Behind almost every man who has distinguished himself in the work that he has set himself to do, you will, if you look, usually find a woman. Particularly is this true in the case of men who aspire to be President.

By MAYME OBER PEAK.

When Florence Kling, now Mrs. Warren G. Harding, wife of the Ohio Senator, who is Republican candidate for President, was born, there was great disappointment in the Kling family because she wasn't a boy. Her father, Amos H. Kling, prominent business man and banker of Marion, Ohio, took it much to heart for awhile, and then he decided to get even with nature and make her a boy. So well did he succeed, although two sons came along in due time, neither one ever cared half as much for horses, dogs and animal and outdoor their sister, Florence, ner had her business capacity.

The Kling boys inherited the talents of their maternal grandmother, a French woman, and an accomplished musician, while their sister who couldn't play a tune without the most laborious practice, took after her practical grandfather, a Pennsylvania Dutchman.

Adept at Business.

From babyhood she knew more about business than she did about rhymes, and nothing her more than to be taken to her father's office, where she would sit quietly for hours, fascinated by the bank's activities and her father's transactions with his clients.

She developed an unusual business mind, and in her early teens, when she had to leave school on account of threatened loss of eyesight, Florence Kling became her father's chief director and pal. She rode horseback with "dad," trav-eled about with him and made up to him in every way she could the loss of her mother's companionship, as Mrs. Kling was more or less of an invalid, and cared very little about outdoor life.

Aside from the fact that she really loved business, the determination of Amos Kling to give his daughter a thorough business training was largely influenced by the financial loss to women, through lack of foresight on their husbands' part and ignorance on their own, which he had discovered in settling up widows' estates.

Met Husband at Dance He made up his mind that Flornce should not only be well provided for, but would know how to take care of her substance, and he instilled in her the sort of business skill that, afterwards, strange to s. C. W. O. And there you have the reason for one of the Presidential candidates today! But it's a long journey from a newspaper office to the White House, particularly when the editor has two nervous breakdowns on the way-the last coming on the very day the circulation manager takes a notion to leave. However, the editor's wife hadn't had a business training for nothing. She said she didn't think the circulation manager had amounted to much, anyhow, and they were just as well off without him; she'd go down to the newspa-per office and run it herself until the editor got on his feet again. Harding Becomes Presperous.

This is literally what she did, writing editorials and society notes about her old friends who came back to Marion to visit, looking after the business management and doing everything in that newspaper except setting type. During office her leisure moments she conducted a sort of business kindergarten among the carriers, nursed her husband and looked after her household duties.

With a wife like that, a man is
